

Interactive comment on “Lessons from the short history of ice sheet model intercomparison” by E. Bueler

Based on the referees' comments and my own appraisal, I recommend that this manuscript should remain in the Discussion section of The Cryosphere. It is a useful reflection of the author on various aspects of ice-sheet-model intercomparison, and as such a valuable contribution for the Discussion section (where it will be archived permanently). However, it is largely too personal, emotional and not sufficiently business-like to qualify as a scientific paper for The Cryosphere. I would like to invite the author to answer to the referees by an Author Comment (which will also be archived permanently), and then leave it at that.
